OE GRADE SPARK PLUGS YOU CAN TRUST

Copper

- Center electrode is copper
- This early technology may not perform as well in modern ignition systems
- Never use copper core in a DIS application, the side wire is not designed to reverse-fire like Double Platinum or Iridium
- May cause premature wear in as little as 18K miles

Platinum

- Center wire is platinum
- Reduced gap erosion
- Longer life and fewer misfires
- Platinum tip center electrode resists oxidation, arc erosion, and maintains a constant gap over a longer period of time than a copper core plug

Double Platinum

- Fires sparks in both directions
- Helps protect from side wire erosion
- Improves plug life with nickel plated thread and corrosion resistant shell
- Platinum fine wire design
- Used in DIS ignition systems

Iridium

- Most corrosion-resistant metal
- Improves engine performance in newer cars so they run more efficiently
- Longer intervals for changing plugs (Up to 100K miles)
- Lower voltage requirement needed for spark to jump the gap with coil over/coil near plug systems
- Coils are smaller and the diameter of the center electrode is reduced
- Iridium is mixed with platinum and tungsten to be more resistant to oxidation and handle erosion
