Battle over 'Baby Shark' song gets bloody

Maggie Gilroy
Binghamton Press & Sun-Bulletin
USA TODAY NETWORK

Johnny Only's fans don't always call him by name.

To some, Only is known as "the Baby Shark Guy." After years of performing his own version of the popular "Baby Shark" tune, the New York-based children's entertainer and DJ, whose legal name is Jonathan Wright, became almost synonymous with the song.

So, when a Korean YouTube video of the "Baby Shark" song went viral, it sounded familiar.

A little too familiar.

With the help of Korean attorney K.S. Chong - known for representing pop star PSY, of the hit "Gangnam Style," in a 2015 real estate battle - Only is suing Korean entertainment company SmartStudy, the owner of "Baby Shark" creator Pinkfong, and claiming copyright infringement.

While the text of the lawsuit is in Korean and has not been translated to English, Chong said the suit is seeking damage compensation and demands Pinkfong stop the infringement.

If damage compensation is awarded, it will be determined by the judge after the hearings are closed, Chong said.

In an emailed statement, a communications representative from SmartStudy responded to the suit, stating "Pinkfong's 'Baby Shark' is based on a traditional singalong chant which has passed to public domain. Produced by SmartStudy, we are the producer and publisher, we own and control 100% of Pinkfong Baby Shark."

Chong said the case is underway at the Seoul Central District Court. The first hearing was in July, and the Korea Copyright Commission will soon review the two songs.

Only thinks it was several decades ago when he first heard "Baby Shark." He was entertaining at a camp for pre-teens and teens, and listened to the campers sing the popular song.

Later, he became a toddler music entertainer. But he couldn't add the camp version to his repertoire. It wasn't appropriate for his audience.

While versions of the song vary, it's traditionally gory.

"The whole point of the song is the scary shark attack. The narrator typically loses limbs and dies from it," Only said. "There would be a verse and motions for every part of the attack."

The chant typically is sung without music, and includes bloody details in its lyrics that detail a shark attack. Lyrics including "lost an arm do do do do do" and "lost a leg do do do do do" often are sung with children waving around their arms and legs.

"The object of the chant was to improvise details and motions," Only said. "For example, the counselors might break the campers up into groups and ask them to come up with their own version and then perform for each other."

While entertaining toddlers, Only found the importance of songs incorporating motions along with the lyrics. So, as he wanted to share the song with younger audiences, Only created his own version.

"I realized that the baby shark chant could be made into a toddler-aged children's song if I changed the words and added music," he said. "So I did."

Only said he published his version of "Baby Shark" on Sept. 1, 2011.

A YouTube video of Only singing the song beside a pool with a group of children is dated Sept. 25, 2011, and is labeled the "non-dismemberment version."

The single also is available for 99 cents on Amazon music and iTunes, or included with Only's "Banana Ram Sam Interactive" album. (The album is $8.99 on Amazon Music and $9.99 on iTunes).
