Mary

cides to marry an Englishman, Lord Darnley (Jack Lowden), in order to have a baby who could in theory unite the divided England and Scotland.

If all this sounds like an old-school version of "House of Cards," it's because the Netflix show's creator, Beau Willimon, wrote the "Mary" script, which is slow in the early going but takes a compelling turn as the various men move against their queens, be it shadowy or salaciously. There is a definite modern relevance in its exploration of the centuries-long, male-dominated political world: Mary isn't a stand-in for Hillary Clinton, but when Knox rouses the rabble against their queen with shouts of "Death to her!" they might as well be chanting "Lock her up."

As a theater director making her first film, Rourke crafts a lush environment inside and out, from spot-on makeup and costuming for all the palace scheming to the rolling Scottish highlands where Mary reigns. She also gets superb performances from her two lead actresses: Ronan is as strong as usual as a royal spitfire who's hard to break, though Robbie has the showier, more fascinating part.

As a follow-up to last year's Oscar-nominated take on Tonya Harding in "I Tonya," Robbie is equally impressive as the complex Elizabeth, a woman wracked with internal insecurity but just as tough as her cousin when riled.

The narrative leads to the inevitable confrontation between the two, one rife with ego and emotion that never happened but is enthralling to watch. It's a scene akin to Al Pacino and Robert De Niro facing off in "Heat," or a couple of heavyweights who finally square up in the ring after months of trash talk.

"How cruel men are," Elizabeth says, summing up a recurring theme of "Mary Queen of Scots" (and of sister film "The Favourite"), while also deftly pointing out a common obstacle for female leaders, whether now or 500 years in the past.

Margot Robbie reigns as Queen Elizabeth I in "Mary Queen of Scots." LIAM DANIEL/FOCUS FEATURES

Lead Agency Contracting Process

All agreements offered through National IPA have been awarded via a thorough Request for Proposal (RFP) competitive solicitation by a public agency/governmental entity (e.g. state, city, county, public university or school district). The contracting process is the foundation of National IPA and sets us apart from other cooperatives. In order for even the most restrictive agencies nationwide to realize the best value offered by cooperative procurement, National IPA ensures that industry best practices, processes and procedures are applied.

The Cooperative Contracting Process

1. The lead agency prepares a competitive solicitation, incorporating language to make the agreement accessible nationally to agencies in states that allow intergovernmental (i.e.: "piggyback") contract usage.

2. The lead agency issues the solicitation and approved amendments and notifications, and conducts pre-proposal conference/meetings.
